Poem — Once a loser is the biggest winner

A loser in everything done,
Some taunted destiny is null as nearly none.
Being average or just pass,
You might be alive but still you lost toss.

A place where never dominant,
You reached a place where you are the most prominent.

Surely you were at a wrong place till ex date,
Now you are there where only you are the one having the highest rate.

You were not even considered while selecting the uppermost,

Now your name stands first place under the topmost.

Because earlier you were there,
Where competition was high and your presence was there but nowhere.

You were already a precious blessing that's rare,
But now you are blessed where you are getting real care.

Poem — Adulthood

When did that pencil turn into a pen ?
When did those streets turn into corridors ?

When did those thousand friends turn into strangers?
When did that brutally honest kid turn into a hypocrite?

When did that foodie turn into a diet conscious person?

When did that extrovert turn into introvert ?
When that early bird turn into night owl ?

When did those pretty smiles turn into tears ?
When did that carefree child turn into a responsible person?

Archival Science/ Studies

History of every place is embedded in thousands of manuscripts, records, inscriptions, documents, etc. These unique records scientifically preserved and restored called archival records, help to understand the history of a particular region and society; to provide evidence for legal purposes; to prove ownership and rights; to demonstrate how organizations operate and how people lived etc. Archives alias Archival Records is the store house of historical records/documents and the physical place they are located. The word 'archive' is derived from the Greek source arkheia (pl. of arkheion) meaning public office or town hall, in which important official state documents were filed and interpreted under the authority of the Archon (ruler or lord, frequently used as the title of a specific public office). Usually archives consist of records that have been selected for permanent or long-term preservation on the ground of their enduring cultural, historical or evidentiary value.

The terms museums, archives and libraries may be confusing. All these are cultural institutions, concerned with the collection and preservation of cultural heritage that holds a unique position in any modern state. The three fields work together to document all flavors and varieties of history with a single purpose, but each has its own discipline, own programs of training, and bodies of literature. While Museums focus on historical artifacts and objects; Libraries specializes in managing published materials like books, magazines etc, and Archives focuses on historical records. Although archival collections can often be found within library buildings, they are quite distinct from libraries with regard to their functions and organization.

Eligibility :
Most colleges and universities teach Archival Science as a subsidiary subject with Information Science, or paired with a History program. Graduates in history, library science, political science, archival science or a similar discipline can start off their career as an archivist with archival coursework and some practical knowledge. The minimum educational qualification required to join for the above mentioned courses is 10+2 or its equivalent. On completion of the bachelors degree, one can go for masters in the respective field and can further enroll for M.Phil or Ph.D.

The term archives can mean different things and can be defined in three ways namely ;

- Historical record collections : These are groups of records like papers, documents, files, photographs and other similar materials collected and preserved by an individual or organization.
- Repositories (Physical facilities) : Here archives refers to a physical location or facility like a building or part of a building where archival records are located

- Organizations : Archives may also mean an organization, program or agency that is responsible for managing and preserving historical records.

Though archives are found in many different contexts, all archival programs have the same fundamental goal; i.e preservation of records about history and cultural heritage.
