Signs you're not eating enough protein

Protein is a macronutrient made up of amino acids. It is essential for your body and is often known as the building blocks for the muscles. Proteins are not only vital for the repair and maintenance of the muscles, but also provide energy to the body and regulate hormones. Furthermore, it works as enzymes that accelerate chemical reactions, regulating the passage of substances across the cell membrane and shielding against diseases.

The recommended dietary allowance to prevent deficiency for 'an average sedentary adult' is 0.8 grams per kilogram of body weight. However, you should increase your intake if you notice any of the following signs (after consulting your doc-

Weakness, muscle loss and fatigue: Lack of protein in your diet can result in weakness, fatigue and muscle loss. This is because when the body is low on dietary protein, the body satisfies its protein requirement from skeletal nuscles. Over time, it leads to muscle wasting, which in turn lowers your strength and slows down your metabolism. Hence, caus-Slow-recovering injuries: If you recently suffered an injury from
