Ephemeral Fever
(ATTENTION DAIRY FARMERS)

Ephemeral Fever, also known as three-day sickness, is a viral disease of cattle and buffalo which is transmitted by biting insects and usually persists for 3 days only. The disease is characterized by very high morbidity (80%) but mortality is very low (1%-2%) however mortality rates have exceeded 10% in few reported outbreaks. It causes losses due to reduction in milk yield, recumbency in affected animals and sometimes death also.

Clinical Signs:
Ephemeral Fever is characterized by high fever (104-107⁰ F), inappetence, shivering, serous nasal discharge, drooling, difficult breathing, muscular stiffness/lameness and drop in milk yield in affected animals

Nasal Discharge and Drooling Unable to Rise Muscular Stiffness

Transmission and Spread:
❖ Most prevalent in the wet season in tropical countries like India.
❖ Through biting and flying insects like mosquitos.
❖ Through animal movement.

To reduce the incidence of this disease in dairy animals and minimize the impact on dairy farmers the following DO's and DONT's are advised:-

DO's

- Remove stagnant water from and around dairy farm/shed.
- Proper disposal of manure/slurry in and around sheds.
- Control of fly, mosquitos and other insects using repellents/nets/pour-on or backline rubs.
- Restrict movement of cattle from and to affected herd/area.
- Adopt strict quarantine measures for newly purchased animals.
- Consult local veterinary doctor for symptomatic treatment which mainly consists of NSAIDs and supportive care for recumbent animals.
- Supplementation with immunity booster vitamins and mineral supplements to support recovery.

DONT's

- Allow water to get collected in and around sheds.
- Allow movement of animals freely from and to affected herd/area.
- Introduce newly purchased animals directly into the herd/farm without quarantine.
- Let sick and healthy animals to mix with each other.
- Put to work recovered animal for few days as there are chances of relapse.
